Russia's invasion of Ukraine has created a humanitarian crisis in Europe on a scale not seen since World War Two. Millions of Ukrainians are internally displaced, and more than 7 million refugees—mostly women and children—have fled to neighboring countries. Ukrainian children have experienced myriad traumas ranging from the death of loved ones to dislocation and having to restart their lives elsewhere. Please join us for a conversation with Professors Zoë Kessler, Dmytro Say, and Yvonne Vissing, who will discuss the war's effects on children and explore regional initiatives designed to help them cope with their wartime experiences.
